

Otto Bartels of Alta Vista, Iowa Engaged As the New Cashier of Mokena Bank

Mr. Otto A. Bartels of Alta Vista, Iowa, for more than twenty-one years in the banking business, will become Cashier of the Mokena State Bank on Wednesday, June 19. On that day the Directors of the bank will meet with Mr. Geuther, the present Cashier, and Mr. Bartels, and make the transfer. Mr. Bartels was chosen from a list of more than thirty applicants.

The advisability of placing an experienced banker in charge of the bank as Cashier has been discussed by the Directors for a long time and their decision was made only after giving the matter long and serious consideration. The illness and death of President W. H. Bechstein hastened their decision. Mr. Geuther became Cashier of the bank September 14, 1927.

The following is taken from "The Alta Vista" and will give our readers some idea as to who Mr. Bartels is:

Announcement was made here Saturday that Otto A. Bartels of this place has accepted the position as Cashier of the Mokena State bank at Mokena, Illinois. Mr. Bartels accepted the position while there last week at which time he had a personal interview with the officers of the bank resulting from previous correspondence. He will take up his new duties about June 19, he stated. In the meantime Mr. Bartels will be busy here closing up his business matters and preparing to move to his new home.

Mokena, Illinois is a thriving little town of about five hundred population and is located about fifteen miles from Joliet, Illinois. Mr. Bartels informs us that he had been in communication with officials of the bank there for some time and that the matter was held in abeyance until last week.

While the people of this community are glad to learn that he has secured such a fine position of honor and trust it goes without saying that all deeply regret Mr. Bartels' leaving the community. Otto, as everyone knows him, has been identified with public life here for more than twenty years and has merited the confidence and good will of all. He has always shown himself to be a man of character, of honesty and integrity and of a fine disposition and personality that has commanded the esteem and respect of all and the lasting friendship of scores. For twenty one years he was associated with the Alta Vista Savings Bank, starting as bookkeeper and ultimately promoted to the position of cashier. His work was a material factor in the wonderful growth and record of the local institution until about a year ago when he was obliged to resign his position on account of his health.

In civic and community affairs Otto has always been interested, active and progressive. Town and community welfare found his endorsement and support. He was township clerk for a period of years and a member of the board of directors of the Community Hall corporation and at present is secretary of the Farmers' Creamery Association, City treasurer, local public school treasurer, treasurer of Farmers' Lumber and Coal Company, of the Farmers' Telephone company, of the Alta Vista Commercial Club and of five rural school districts and Justice of the Peace all of which positions, of course, he is resigning. Briefly his record and work here in the past has been of a wide nature and well known to all. No better recommendation could be given him than a reference to his record in the past. He has built up a fine home here and it is hoped that should he decide to leave the banking business in the future years he and his charming wife will again return here to make their home.

In again associating himself with the banking business Mr. Bartels has the sincere best wishes of the entire community who wish for him and his wife much success and happiness in their new field.

HIGH SCHOOL ROMANCE AT ORLAND PARK

Miss Evelyn Smith, assistant principal and teacher in the Orland Park High school surprised her many friends by getting married last Thursday morning under rather unusual and very romantic circumstances.

Miss Smith had been engaged to Dr. Milton E. Smith, a young technician of Chicago for more than a year and plans had been made to hold the wedding in Miss Smith's room in the High school on Sunday, June 9th. However, last minute complications necessitated hurried changes of plans and Miss Smith and Dr. Smith, armed with the necessary license and accompanied by the bride's brother and by Dr. Herzfeld, a friend of the groom, motored to the home of Judge Sherman S. Knox early last Thursday morning and were married by the Judge, with Mrs. Knox and Dr. Herzfeld acting as witnesses. The young couple are planning on taking up their residence in Orland Park next fall. Miss Smith has made a wonderful record as teacher in the Orland Park school during the last year and is universally loved by everyone who has come in contact with her. Dr. Smith is connected with one of the large Chicago laboratories as technician and both he and his talented bride will make welcome additions to the community of Orland Park.

Orland School Faculty Re-Hired

The Board of Directors of the Orland Park School District No. 135 announce that the entire teaching personnel of last year, with the exception of Mrs. Lulu M. Campbell, have signed contracts to teach for another year. Mrs. Campbell, who finds teaching rather strenuous, is going to take a rest at her home at Carbondale, Ill. The thanks and the good wishes of the community go with her. To fill Mrs. Campbell's place, the board has secured Miss Agatha Harkins. Miss Harkins is no stranger to the Orland School, having served here as substitute. She is well qualified scholastically and has the reputation of being an excellent disciplinarian. The line up for next year is as follows:

Prof. E. F. Holt, Principal and High school instructor.
Mrs. Evelyn Smith, Assistant principal and High school instructor.
Miss Agatha Harkins, upper grades.
Miss Lucille Schmadeke, intermediate grades.
Miss Helen Snyder, primary grades.
Several changes in the High School courses are contemplated which will rate our school even higher than it is at present. Even now our High school has a class "A" rating, but with the contemplated additions to our courses, we will be put in the preferred class. Prof. Holt will begin his annual canvass of the graduates of the 8th grades of the surrounding district schools and it is hoped that every graduate approached will cast their

The Town Doctor (THE DOCTOR OF TOWNS)

WHAT GOOD IS A FOURTH OF JULY CELEBRATION?
A man recently asked me, "What good is a Fourth of July celebration to a town?" And he expressed a question that undoubtedly is in the minds of many, especially those past the age of getting a kick out of any kind of a celebration.

It is true that much of the original intent and purpose of the 4th of July celebrations has been lost or at least overlooked in modern ways of celebrating. Have you ever stopped to consider how many of those that shoot fireworks, never stop to consider why they are doing it? I have often wondered at the percentage of people who make hurrah on the Fourth of July that really pause in commemoration of the deed representative of the day. Leaving unsaid the honor due the day, a Fourth of July celebration has a material value to every community, whether that community holds a festival or the inhabitants go elsewhere to spend the day.

If your community is going to put on a celebration, pitch in and do everything—go to the organization committee or whoever is sponsoring and OFFER to do something.

Get busy and invite your friends to join you and yours for the day. Make it an invitation worth while. If you haven't any friends you can induce to join in the festivities, help somebody else to entertain their guests or appoint yourself a committee of one to do your utmost to help entertain the casual stranger in your midst.

Start now on brightening the corner where you are. Make your yard, your house, your store, your entire community look clean, bright and attractive; put on your best behavior and your most winning smile and when the company comes, show them around, introduce them to the place where you live, and "SELL" them on your community.

If the Fourth of July isn't worth anything else to a community, it is worth the opportunity it gives you to SELL EVERYBODY that comes to your town on what a real place it is and that the people in it and around it are REAL people.

If there is no celebration to be held in your home town, and if you attend a celebration elsewhere, you still have an opportunity to serve well the place where you live. Business goes where it is invited, and stays and comes back to the place where it is well treated and served best. You can not SELL people on your community if you do not TELL them ABOUT your community. Therefore, if you are a guest of those who dwell in some other city, INVITE them to visit and do business with YOUR community, tell them about your community "tell 'em 'till you sell 'em" that your community is a good community in which to live, work, play and prosper.

But whatever you do, celebrate at home, if home is celebrating. Copyrighted, 1929, A. D. Stone. Reproduction prohibited in whole or in part.

Orland P. T. A. Flag and Flag Pole Dedicated

At the regular monthly meeting of the Orland P. T. A. was held Thursday night, the much talked of and long looked for flag pole for the school was dedicated.

Through the efforts of the Lions club, a sum of money was raised by means of a poultry bazaar for this purpose. The flag is being purchased by the P. T. A. Herman Kruspe and Harry Heiting have charge of the installation of the pole. This pole will be 66 feet high and is being set in the center of the walk midway between the street and the school house. The flag is 8x12 feet and when flung to the breeze at the top of the new pole should be an inspiring sight.

The ceremonies incidental to the dedication were in charge of the Tinley Park Post of the American Legion. The Rev. Coats of Lemont delivered the address.

The meeting was necessarily called early as daylight was essential to a ceremony of this kind and the hour of 7 p. m. was therefore set.

Raid Tough Joint In New Lenox Twp.

For sometime a notorious tough joint has been operating in the old brick tavern on the Lincoln highway three miles east of New Lenox. At one time as many as 12 girls were in the employ of the manager of the joint it is said. A thriving business was done and a large number of cars were to be seen parked in the front of the building. At night the place was lit up from cellar to garret. On last Wednesday night the Will County officials on warrants issued by States Attorney H. Rehn made a raid on the joint and arrested two men and five women.

Frank Birkey, R. F. D. No. 2 Joliet, was arrested as the keeper and the other man who claimed to be from Chicago, gave his name as Joseph Grimes. All of them, men as well as women, were each fined $200 and costs by Justice of the Peace Andrew Graham of Joliet.

The two men and three of the women were unable to pay fines and were sent to jail.

Last fall and the early part of the winter a sporting house infested the brick tavern but was short lived and the building was vacant until the outfit arrested last week began operations a few weeks ago. They ran a wide open place it is said. Sporting houses in trying to invade this community find they have struck a wrong location as they are quickly rooted out.

Orland Boy's Eye Hurt When Hit By Tree Branch

Donald Cleveland, age 9, the son of Ike Cleveland of Orland Park, met with a particularly distressing accident last week and which may cost him the sight of one eye and may even necessitate the removal of the eye itself. Donald had been playing at the home of one of his boy friends and the children were chasing each other around the yard. In passing under some foliage, a branch struck Donald in the eye, punctured the eye ball. He was taken to the hospital and it seems agreed that all hopes of saving the sight is gone, but efforts are being made to save the sight itself. At this writing, a consultation of specialists have not yet determined just what to do.

Storm Interferes With Orland Play

On Tuesday evening, June 11, the Lutheran Young Peoples society of the Christ Lutheran church of Orland Park presented the three act comedy drama "Eyes of Love". The play was given in the auditorium of the Orland Park High school the use which had been donated by the school Directors. In spite of the weather, with the thunder rolling and lightning flashing and the rain coming down in torrents, a very fair turnout was present. The play was well acted and well received and even though the thunderstorm put the lights "on the hummer" a couple of times during the performance and necessitated delays while waiting for the "juice" to come on again, the audience seemed to thoroughly enjoy themselves. In view of the bad break in the weather which kept so many away that would have liked to have been there, Rev. Meddler stated that unless announcement to the contrary is given, the play will be presented again on Wednesday, June 19th. The cast of characters included Minnie Brandt, Betty Habenicht, Evelyn Brier, Emil Habenicht, Marie Brier, Emily Waje, Carl Habenicht, Ed. Schmadeke, Clarence Kramer and Robert Ebeling all of whom play their respective roles in an acceptable manner.

The Orland Park Lutheran church Young Peoples Society have postponed their comedy-drama "Eyes of Love" to Wednesday night, June 19, at the Orland Park school auditorium on account of the stormy night last Tuesday. Everyone invited.

Busy Graduation Week At Orland

Commencement week in Orland Park proved to be a busy week indeed and there are many who tried to keep up with the entire round of events who have resolved to themselves to "hit the hay" early for the next couple of weeks to make up for lost sleep.

On Sunday evening, June 2nd, the Baccalaureate exercises were held in the school house. The Rev. W. H. Meddler, pastor of the Christ Lutheran church preached the Baccalaureate sermon. The Rev. Meddler is an earnest and convincing speaker and using as his text "The Fear of the Lord is the Foundation of Knowledge" presented his argument in a powerful and effective manner that impressed the graduates and audience alike. Prof. E. F. Holt, substituted for Rev. Paul Sanders of the M. E. church delivered the invocation and the Rev. Father W. A. Gorey of St. Michaels Catholic church pronounced the benediction.

On Tuesday evening the commencement exercises of the Grammar school were held. Charles Doctor, (Uncle Charlie), our genial Township Treasurer gave the commencement address and in his own inimitable way gave the graduates a general talk on the life of responsibilities upon which they were about to embark and urged them to take advantage of every opportunity to advance themselves in the pathway of knowledge. Those receiving diplomas were Velma Reich, Elizabeth Mulleux, Cora Arnold, Frank Heim, Gottfried Koehler and Robert Uthe.

Velma Reich won the honor of being Valedictorian and to her went the Ray C. Holton medal for Scholarship. Elizabeth Mulleux was the Salutatorian and she was awarded the J. E. Creer medal for good conduct. The presentation of these medals was made by James E. Creer, President of the board.

On Wednesday evening the High school graduates had their "big moment". Prof. Ira C. Hamilton, former principal of Morgan Park and a Professor of Political Economy, Civics, and History at Lindblom High school, Chicago gave the address to the graduating class. He made a powerful plea to them to continue on with the higher grades and congratulated them on having received their training in the Orland Park High School.

Speaking from the experience gained as Principal of schools whose enrollment ran over 5000 pupils, he pointed out the advantage that the student in the smaller school enjoyed, that of personal contact and individual attention from the instructor-something impossible in the large schools.

The list of graduates include Ly-las Kay, Ruth Ludwig, Margaret Bishop, Isabella Franks, Mabel Leipsdorff, Ethel Rust, Robert Wagner, Lawrence Cure, Theodore Uthe and Thomas McAllister.

Ly-las Kay won the honor of being Valedictorian and was awarded the Sherman S. Knox medal for Scholarship. Ruth Ludwig won second honors and was chosen to deliver the Salutatory address. Ethel Rust was given the distinction of being class Prophet. In addition to the scholarship medal donated by Dr. Knox, which was specifically intended for the graduating class, two other medals open to competition to both classes of the High School were awarded. The Rev. W. A. Gorey medal for History was won by Alvin Uthe, President of the Freshman class. Rudolph Bayer of the Freshman class was awarded the John A. Klein medal for Sportsmanship. The presentation of the Honor medals was made by Rev. Gorey. Miss Nellie McMahon, assistant County Superintendent, gave a short talk to the graduates. The presentation of the diplomas was made by Dr. Sherman S. Knox, Secretary of the School Board. Benediction was pronounced by Rev. Gorey.

Jim Creer and family left for a motor trip through Iowa and Minnesota. They expect to be gone about ten days.

The object and plans of the proposed survey of the Southwest Suburban territory in which Tinley Park is included, was outlined to the Tinley Lions Club at their meeting Monday night. A number of the Tinley Lions attended a meeting at Oak Forest Thursday evening regarding the proposed survey.

Rev. Paul T. Sanders of the Orland M. E. church and Mr. Hutchinson of the University of Chicago addressed the Lions Club on the proposed survey.

JUDAH TAKEN CAPTIVE

LESSON TEXT—II Kings 25:1-21.
GOLDEN TEXT—Righteousness exalteth a nation, but sin is a reproach to any people.

PRIMARY TOPIC—A Nation That Forgot God.
JUNIOR TOPIC—A Nation That Forgot God.

INTERMEDIATE AND SENIOR TOPIC—Paying the Price of Sinning.
YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULT TOPIC—National Accountability to God.

Zedekiah was made king of Judah by the king of Babylon (II Kings 24:17), but in spite of this kindness and the word of the Lord spoken to him by Jeremiah (Jer. 34:17, 18, cf. Jer. 52:3), he rebelled against the king of Babylon. He relied upon the help of Egypt, but all that Egypt could do was to cause temporary interruption of the siege of Jerusalem.

I. The Siege of Jerusalem (vv. 1-3).

1. The time (vv. 1, 2).
It began on the tenth day of the tenth month of the ninth year of Zedekiah's reign and lasted about eighteen months. The tenth month, according to the Jewish calendar, corresponds to our December, January, as their calendar year began about the middle of March. The reason the exact time is given is that this was to be an event of great importance to the Jews in their exile.

2. The method (v. 1). Nebuchadnezzar came with a large army and encamped against Jerusalem and built forts against it round about. It is thought that siege walls were built around the city, shutting it in. On the tops of these walls forts were built from which missiles of destruction could be hurled by their engines of war against the city.

3. The famine (v. 3).
Geikie says, "It was speedily followed, as is always the case, with an outbreak of pestilence. Food was well-nigh gone. There had long been no bread. Mothers were at last driven to murder and eat their children. The richest citizens wandered about searching for scraps in the dung hills." It is estimated that one-third of the people of Jerusalem died of starvation.

II. Zedekiah's Flight and Fate (vv. 4-7).

1. "The city was broken up" (v. 4).
The Chaldeans had succeeded in making an opening in the wall so large that they could make their way into the city in spite of all that the Hebrews could do.

2. Zedekiah's flight (v. 4).
The king with his men of war fled by night toward the plain. His object no doubt was to cross the Jordan at Jericho and hide in the mountains east of the river.

3. Zedekiah's fate (vv. 5-7).

(1) He was overtaken in the plains of Jericho (v. 5). When his flight was discovered, the Chaldean army pursued and captured him. (2) He was brought to the king of Babylon at Riblah (v. 6), a town north of Damascus. It was the king's headquarters from which he directed his armies against Tyre and Jerusalem. Zedekiah was tried as a criminal before Nebuchadnezzar. (3) His fate (v. 7). His sons were slain in his sight; his eyes were put out; he was bound with fetters of brass and they carried him to Babylon where he remained prisoner until the day of his death (Jer. 52:11).

III. Jerusalem Destroyed (vv. 8-10).

The dismantling of the city was delayed a month, perhaps awaiting instructions from Nebuchadnezzar, who was at Riblah.

1. They burnt of the house of the Lord (v. 9).

This was the sacred temple built by Solomon, with additions and modifications. Before burning it was despoiled of all its sacred contents.

2. Burnt the king's house (v. 9).

This was doubtless the palace built by Solomon.

3. Burnt all the houses of Jerusalem (v. 9).

The implication is that the common houses were left for the people (v. 12).

4. They broke down the walls of Jerusalem.

IV. The Disposition of the Temple Furniture and Priests (vv. 13-21).

1. The temple furniture (vv. 13-17).
The pillars of brass and the brazen sea were broken into pieces by the Babylonians and were carried to Babylon.

2. Certain officers and priests (vv. 18-21).

Certain officers, priests and three-score men were taken to Riblah by the king of Babylon, and were slain.

From Small Beginnings

Prayer brings God into what men are pleased to term the little affairs of life. The lives of people are made up of these small matters; yet how often do great consequences come from small beginnings!—E. M. Bounds

Color-Blind Towards God

Man is color-blind towards God. The blue of God's truth is to him an arousing, angering red. The soft, soothing green of His love becomes a noisy, irritating yellow.—Dr. S. D. Gordon

PREFERRED by millions

Cases of recurrent constipation, associated with too little bulk in the diet, should yield to Post's Bran Flakes. If your case is abnormal, consult a competent physician at once and follow his advice.

POST'S BRAN FLAKES

WITH OTHER PARTS OF WHEAT

—because it's good to eat as well as effective

It's so downright good—Post's Bran Flakes with other parts of wheat. With foamy milk or cream, berries or fruit, the crumbly, flavory flakes are delicious. And there's the double satisfaction of knowing that each appetizing mouthful is giving you the bulk to help combat constipation.

Probably this appetite-tempting goodness is one reason why millions prefer Post's Bran Flakes. You can enjoy it every day—and forget it's so good for you! Try it tomorrow morning and right along for the next two weeks. Find out for yourself how good it is to eat—how good it makes you feel. Crisp and ready to serve from the package—and marvelous in muffins and bread.

Who Can Recall Days of the Singing School?

The passing of winter recalls an institution that flourished in the Middle West, as it had in earlier days farther east—the old-fashioned singing school, says the Omaha World-Herald. It ran its course in the earlier '80s, and was at its best in the '70s. Little is ever heard of this pleasant educational feature. It flourished mostly in small towns and rural districts, ending with an entertainment at the schoolhouse of a town hall, where the singing teacher exhibited his wares in the shape of bass, tenor, alto and soprano voices that had been trained with the aid of the old-time tuning fork.

Singing masters were difficult to obtain. Sometimes a traveling teacher taught, generally having schools in several different localities, all easily reached, but not conflicting. Notes and scales were first taught, written on a blackboard. Singing of simple tunes by note came next. Eventually came the songs with words.

New Use for Airplane

Dealers in fruit, garden produce and flowers in Holland have solved the problem of transporting their perishable stocks, by the use of airplanes. Two new freight planes will be put into operation soon between Amsterdam and London. Airplanes have made it possible for London residents to enjoy at dinner strawberries picked that morning in Holland.

Their Portraits Will be Much in Demand after July

By ELMO SCOTT WATSON

IT IS hereby predicted that on and after July 1, 1929, the American people are going to become very much interested in collecting portraits of the great men of this nation and that, of them all, the portraits of the eleven notables pictured in this article will be the most in demand. For, on that date the United States Treasury will begin issuing the new reduced size currency upon which these portraits will be the distinctive mark of the various denominations. The following table is a "Who's Who" of the new currency.

Denomination	Portrait	Back Design
$1	Washington	One
$2	Jefferson	Monticello
$5	Lincoln	Lincoln Memorial
$10	Hamilton	Treasury
$20	Jackson	White House
$50	Grant	Capitol
$100	Franklin	Independence Hall
$500	McKinley	Five Hundred
$1,000	Cleveland	One Thousand
$5,000	Madison	Five Thousand
$10,000	Chase	Ten Thousand

There is a very definite reason for having a distinctive portrait on each of the different denominations of bills. It will make each denomination easier to recognize so that there will be fewer mistakes made in making change and you are not likely to hand somebody a $5 bill or a ten thinking it is a one. At present we have eleven denominations made in 39 different designs. There are five kinds of $10 bills. The new currency will have only one. At present the face of Washington is on both the $1 and $20 bills. On the new currency Washington will appear on the $1 alone. Under the old system of currency it was possible for counterfeiters to raise the ones to twenties, since both had Washington's portrait on them and only the figures needed to be changed. In fact, the adoption of the distinctive portraits and characteristic embellishments on the back of the new bills will be the best guard against counterfeiting that Uncle Sam could possibly have. So if you will memorize the portraits as they appear on the bills of the different denominations you cannot be short-changed and you will not be so likely to make mistakes in making change yourself.

SALMON P. CHASE

But there are several other reasons why the reduction of the size of the present bills, which are seven and seven-sixteenths by three and one-eighth inches, to the new size of six and five-eighths by two and eleven-twelfths inches, will be advantageous both to the makers of our money and the users of it. A substantial saving will be made in manufacturing the new currency because the amount of paper required will be reduced almost one-third. To put it into concrete terms, it will save the government enough paper annually to cover one thousand acres. Less ink will be needed, shipping weight will be cut and more notes will be produced by the same operation by the bureau of engraving and printing because each plate will have twelve instead of eight subjects.

So far as the public is concerned the new currency will be more convenient to handle. It will, for example, go into an envelope of ordinary size without folding, something which the old bills would not do. The new bills will fit more comfortably into the palm of the hand for counting, whereas the old size cramped the teller's hand. The new money will not require such a large pocket bill-fold and already new bill-folds are being manufactured which will hold the new currency without folding. The advantage of this is that the money will be kept flat and will last longer, since it is at the point of folding that bills break and have to be replaced. In general appearance, the new money will closely resemble the currency now in use but it will have a distinctive feature, consisting of localized red and blue fiber incorporated in the body while the process of manufacture so placed as to form particular stripes.

In the past the portraits on the currency of the United States have been those of men who were more or less intimately connected with the development of our monetary system. This tradition is being carried out in the new currency. Although the men who are pictured thereon frequently held positions in regard to currency and other problems which were widely divergent at the same time, all of them had something to do with the evolution of our money system.

So the next time one of the new hundred dollar bills comes into your possession and you look upon the benign countenance of Benjamin Franklin, it should remind you that Ben's advice to you would be to save that hundred dollars rather than to spend it. For Franklin was the first apostle and exponent of thrift in this country. More than that, Franklin's name is inseparably connected with the financing of the movement which made the United States of America possible—the Revolution. For it is not too much to say that had it not been for Franklin's efforts to get money from foreign powers to aid the colonists, their revolt against England could not have succeeded. Not only did Franklin obtain from France, Spain and other countries loans which were poorly secured at the best but his name was used by other Americans who went abroad for the same purpose. Nearly every one of them, when in need of money, drew drafts on Franklin at Paris and congress itself did the same thing. What is more remarkable is the fact that the drafts often were presented for payment before Franklin had been told that they had been issued. He never failed to honor them and, such was the confidence of the lenders in him, that rarely if ever were requests for loans, in which his name was used, denied.

The face of George Washington on the new one dollar bills, the denomination which will be used oftenest by the most people, is not only a natural tribute to the first great American but it is also a reminder to us that it was during the administration of the first President that our monetary system was established. Similarly the portrait of Thomas Jefferson on the two dollar bills and the portrait of Alexander Hamilton on the ten dollar bills remind us that they were members of Washington's cabinet, Jefferson as secretary of state and Hamilton as secretary of the treasury. Although Washington had great difficulty in preventing political clashes between these two members of his cabinet because of their views on politics, both of them were intimately connected with the establishment of our money system. It was Jefferson who founded the American system of coinage based on the decimal system as a substitute for the more involved British system. So when we find it easy to reckon our accounts by the simple knowledge that ten cents make a dime and ten dimes make a dollar, instead of having to struggle with involved calculations of pence, shillings and pounds, we can be grateful to Thomas Jefferson. In view of that fact it may seem to some that we are showing ingratitude to Jefferson by placing his portrait on the two dollar bills which by some people are considered "unlucky bills" and a denomination to be avoided.

BENJAMIN FRANKLIN

Hamilton is credited by most historians with being the founder of the fiscal system of the United States, and is frequently referred to as the first and greatest secretary of the treasury. Certainly, it took a man of genius to take hold of the financial affairs of a new republic whose credit among other nations was none too good, whose future existence was problematical and whose resources were weakened by a long war and put them upon a firm foundation which has never been shaken from Hamilton's day to this. The name of James Madison, whose portrait appears upon the five thousand dollar bills, is closely associated with those of Hamilton, whose follower he was at first, and of Jefferson, whose secretary of state he became.

The picture of Andrew Jackson on the twenty dollar bills reminds us of the beginning of a new era in American history. When the question of states' rights versus federal domination first became acute and the problem of the United States bank arose, to which Jackson was irreconcilably opposed, he was the storm center of a stormy administration. It was during this time that Abraham Lincoln, the memory of whose greatness is recalled every time that a five dollar bill is passed through your hands, first came into contact with the problems of state and national finance. As a member of the Illinois legislature, he was a supporter and defender of the state banks that had been established in Illinois. When Lincoln became President and the gigantic task of financing the Civil war fell upon his shoulders, he turned to the man whose face you will see on the ten thousand dollar bills (when and if you ever see one)—Salmon P. Chase, secretary of the treasury from 1861 to 1865. Specie payment was suspended in the United States in 1861 and it became the duty of Chase to determine ways and means of carrying the government financially through the war. So he resorted to the issuing of bonds and making green-backs legal tender, and his name has come down in history as "the father of the green-back."

The appearance of Ulysses S. Grant on the new fifty dollar notes is a tribute to his fame as a soldier in winning a war which saved the nation, rather than a monument to his connection with national finance. For the fact is that Grant would be the last man in history to be designated as a financial genius. A failure in business in his early life, his financial venture with a banking firm in his later years was a failure and he was left penniless. But there is no greater example of heroism known than the way in which Grant met the problem of family finances at this time. Bankrupt, crippled from a fall, dying of cancer of the tongue, he dictated two volumes of memoirs, when to speak meant agony, so that his family would be provided for and he did not cease from his task until it was finished.

The portraits of two recent Presidents on the new currency, William McKinley on the five hundred dollar bills and Grover Cleveland on the thousand dollar bills, recalls the connection of both with the money history of the United States since the Civil war. Cleveland will be remembered for his insistence on the observance of the gold standard and his opposition to enforced coinage of silver under the Sherman silver purchase act. Leader of a party divided within itself on the money question, as evidenced by the Democratic nomination of Bryan, in 1896, and Bryan's adherence to bimetalism at the historic ratio of 16 to 1, the boldness of Cleveland's stand is clearly revealed.

THOMAS JEFFERSON

The portrait of McKinley recalls the fact that the country accepted his views on money in preference to Bryan's 16 to 1, and sent him to the White House instead of Bryan.

HOW TO LIVE LONGER

By JOHN CLARENCE FUNK

THE STITCH IN TIME

MANY people have a decided misconception regarding the power of diphtheria antitoxin. They seem to think that a child suffering with this dread malady can receive this treatment and automatically be cured; that because of this scientific weapon the killing power of this disease has been removed from the more active enemies of childhood. Unfortunately this is not true for several reasons.

Diphtheria antitoxin has saved the lives of many young people and will continue to do so, but its record is far from having reached the satisfactory point of offering an absolute defense to the germs causing the trouble. This is not the fault of the antitoxin. Given even half a chance this preparation will develop a remarkable power against the infection and wage a successful battle. But a half chance is what it often does not get.

Parents will promptly admit that a plant must grow; that a house must be constructed; that many turns of the wheel are necessary to reach a destination, but they seem loath to concede any such process where diphtheria is concerned. They are not willing to recognize the possibility of this disease until it is full grown. And that is the time when antitoxin does the least good.

Diphtheria is a definite development and while its beginnings can be mistaken for less dangerous conditions, that is no excuse for any person closing his eyes to the possibility of serious trouble. Any kind of a sore throat accompanied by fever should be sufficient notice to put every parent on guard. Which means immediately taking the child to a physician or bringing the doctor to it. The professional man alone can discover whether the throat condition is of common or diphtheritic variety. In most instances, fortunately, he will be able to allay all fears. But in those cases that he cannot do so, he can immediately put antitoxin to work. That is the time when it gives a splendid account of itself.

It is not too much to say that if most instances where antitoxin has been given soon enough, it has won the victory. It has amazing power at this stage of the disease, but its power wanes in proportion to the length of time elapsing before the case gets treatment.

Take no chances on the possibility of diphtheria. Give the doctor and antitoxin a fair opportunity. Both of them will give splendid accounts of themselves.

P. S.—A gentle reminder: Don't confuse antitoxin with toxin-antitoxin. The former is treatment, the latter prevention. Have your child immunized with toxin-antitoxin. If this advice is followed it will be unnecessary to put antitoxin to the test.

THE SILVER LINING

ONE can be healthy and sick at the same time. Thousands demonstrate this fact daily by harboring the mental leech commonly known as worry. And while worry is life's dark cloud, happiness is its silver lining.

Happiness is one of the most potent drugs. It is also one of the most essential. The man or woman who does not cultivate it and the spirit back of it, is desperately reducing his chances for long life.

Mind over matter is a too well established fact to be discredited. Its existence is proved daily in many ways. For example, it is a summer's night. Suddenly out of the darkness a revolver is stuck in your face with the command, "Hands up!" What of the seventy degrees temperature now? Your hands are cold and you shiver all over. Merely mind over matter!

Since suggestion plays a part in our activities, why not recognize the fact and govern ourselves accordingly?

But there are limitations to be considered. It is one thing to look on the bright side and quite another to be fanatically optimistic. If one is ill, merely to smile will not be enough. To deny the existence of germs and pain by calling them something else is distorting the silver lining and may eventually snuff out your life.

Happiness that attempts to eliminate cold facts isn't happiness at all. One who is engaged habitually in that kind of bliss (lovers, lunatics and poets excepted) are plowing in the wrong field and sowing therein the wrong kind of seed.

It is the sensible type of the product that now is being urged. Happiness properly applied is one of the greatest protections extant for general well being and health. Its power lies in its effectually blocking its mortal enemy, worry.

Therefore cultivate the sunny side of life, and life, in turn, should be sunny for you for a long, long time. (© 1929, Western Newspaper Union.)

Earliest Use of Gold

The use of gold as ornaments first suggested its subsequent use as money and that finally made it the standard upon which the coinage of the world is based. Cubes of gold employed by the Chinese may have been the earliest coins, but modern authorities accept the theory that gold as coins was first used by the Lydians.

THE STORY

Jim Stanley, wealthy young New York business man, unable to concentrate in his dictation to his desk audiphone, has the machine taken to his home, intending to finish his work there. Rollin Waterman, his business partner and closest friend, comes in. Both men are avowedly in love with Doris Colby. Stanley proposes they toss a coin to determine which of them shall, that evening, first ask her to marry him. Waterman wins. Nina Morgan, Waterman's secretary, also his mistress, has overheard his conversation with Stanley and resents Waterman's plan to desert her. Waterman tells her he is practically penniless and must make a rich marriage. He urges Nina to go to Doris and tell her she (Nina) has been wronged—but by Stanley. The girl consents. Doris admits to her father her interest in both Stanley and Waterman, but is unable to make up her mind which to marry.

CHAPTER III—Continued

"Well," admitted Mr. Colby, "one never can be certain in these matters, but of recent weeks my aging eyes have been more or less offended by the continual presence around this house of Rollin Waterman and Jim Stanley. Am I warm?"

"You're hot," said the girl.

"That being the case, I have to say that I would cheerfully poison both of them, but aside from that I have no particular complaint to make of either."

She sighed and murmured, "You're a darling, daddy, but you don't help me very much."

"Well, I'll tell you," said her father, "I have an opinion in the matter. I admit that I have a decided preference for one of these candidates over the other, but I don't intend to indicate it, because I do not wish to handicap my favorite."

"Don't be absurd," said the girl.

"No," insisted her father, with a grin. "So far as I'm concerned, my man is going to have a run for his money."

"Don't think you can fool me, papa. I know which one you like best."

"If you know, why ask me?"

"Daddy you're exasperating. You find your only child is in a crisis in her life, perhaps the greatest crisis in her life, and you won't say a word to help her."

"That's not true, my dear. I'm perfectly willing to analyze the characters of these two young men, so far as I know them. But when it comes to saying which of them you ought to marry, I quit. Because, if you take my advice and it turns out badly, I'm in for a bad quarter of an hour; and if you don't take my advice and it turns out badly, you're in for one. So there."

"Well," she said, "if you've really got anything to say in the matter, now is the time to say it."

"Oh," he answered, "as near as that?"

"Just as near as that."

Her father rose and pushed back his chair. "Come up to the library," he said.

CHAPTER IV

"I wish to see Miss Colby," said Nina.

"And what is the name, please?" said Barker, closing the front door behind her.

"Morgan, Miss Morgan."

"If you will kindly wait in the drawing room, I'll see if Miss Colby's at home."

"Very well. Please say," added Nina, "that I will not keep her long, but that my business is important."

The butler bowed and departed.

Nina's nerve was good and her life had accustomed her to the taking of chances of divers sorts. Nevertheless she was excited. She had made up her mind to do a certain thing, a thing which required an impudence amounting to courage, and yet at the last moment she had an impulse to leap to her feet and run from the house before it was too late. She had sufficient resolution to control the impulse, and now she was making a last attempt to gather all of her resources to do the thing she had come to do.

It had been a rough world for Nina. Born into poverty, the daughter of a wayward father and an anemic mother, she was well on toward womanhood before she realized that there was anything but hardship in this world. As she blossomed into womanhood and her good looks became a settled acquisition, she found that they brought her little but persecution.

But she had sense enough, while yet a child, to realize that education meant increased earning capacity. She read the newspapers and discovered that there were various ways whereby some sort of education could be obtained at slight expense. There were night schools, free lecture courses, correspondence schools, museums, public libraries. To all of these sources from time to time she applied, with no inconsiderable results. But through all her progress from the depths of poverty and ignorance to a moderate degree of intelligence and sophistication, she had found her path beset by men. She had found many men anxious to improve her education, but the motives of few of these instructors turned out to be altruistic. By the time she was twenty years old she had come to regard men as a race of wolves. She admitted no exceptions.

And it was in pursuance of this confirmed philosophy of life and action that she had come tonight to the home of Doris Colby, and now that she was here, although even her settled assurance was a little ruffled, she had no thought of turning back.

She was not even daunted by the sudden appearance of the beautiful Miss Colby herself, when the latter came into the drawing room a moment later.

"How do you do," said Doris.

"How do you do," said Nina.

There was a moment's mutual inspection, as always between two women who meet for the first time—and it is probable that in that fraction of a second each one of them had come to some definite conclusion about the other. Each one of them had probably said to herself: "I like her," or "I don't like her." But aloud Miss Colby said:

"What can I do for you, Miss Morgan?—that was the name, was it not?"

"Yes, Nina Morgan."

"I don't think I know you, do I?" said the daughter of the house.

"No," said Nina, "we have never met, but I have seen you several times."

"Ah?"

"Yes. You see, I am a secretary in the office of Stanley and Waterman."

"Indeed?" said Doris. "Perhaps you bring me a message from one of them?"

"Not exactly," replied Nina, "and yet in a way, perhaps."

"You interest me," murmured Doris, "won't you sit down?"

Nina summoned all her resolution, and began: "I've come to tell you something, Miss Colby, which it is most important you should know, for your own sake, before it is too late. But before I tell you what it is I want you to promise on your word of honor that you will never repeat it to a living soul."

"Really," said Miss Colby, "I cannot imagine what you can have to say that could concern me so deeply."

"You will in a moment, but I cannot speak without your promise."

"I can give you no such promise lightly."

"I don't ask it lightly. When I have told you what I have to say you will realize that only after long and anxious thought have I persuaded myself that it is my duty to come and tell you. It is a matter that concerns my happiness deeply, and your own also, perhaps even more deeply than mine. But if you cannot give me your word of honor never to repeat to anyone what am going to tell you, there is nothing for me to do but shut my mouth and go away."

Miss Colby smiled: "Ah-h," she said, "this sounds like melodrama!"

"Call it what you please. It's a thing that strikes at the heart of the happiness of two women, you and me. And now you must decide—yes, or no?"

Miss Colby's smile still lingered playfully. She was by no means moved to any sort of anxiety, but her curiosity was engaged. So after a moment's hesitation, she said: "Very well, I give you my word of honor."

"Very good," said Nina.

"Yes," continued Doris, while the smile still lingered in the corners of her mouth, "it shall be our little secret. And now what is it?"

Nina lifted her black eyes from the rug and fixed them upon the eyes of the other. "I suppose," she began, "you will be curious as to my motive. You will perhaps call it revenge, and it is partly that—I don't deny it. But it is more than that. I am determined that my happiness and yours shall not be ruined by the same man, if I can prevent it."

The violet eyes widened in surprise. "Really," breathed Doris.

"I do hope," went on the other, "you won't think me impertinent or impudent or curious, and I am sure you won't when you have heard me out. But the fact is that I have reason to suppose that you are considering the possibility of marrying a certain man."

"Upon my word," cried Doris, with a touch of sarcasm, "how things do get about! And how, may I ask, have you arrived at this conclusion?"

"From various sources," answered Nina. "I have seen you occasionally in public in company with the man I mean. I have seen frequent references to the possibility of your engagement to one or two of those gossip society papers, and what's more, I have had some talk with the man himself upon this very subject."

"I suppose," said Doris Colby, "that I ought to ask you to go away at once."

"Please, please don't," said Nina earnestly, and something in her sudden earnestness caught and held the other. "If you do you will regret it as long as you live, believe me."

"Very well," said Doris, after a moment's reflection, "but I warn you if what you have to say is merely silly gossip, actuated by a spirit of petty malice, it will have no effect whatever upon me."

"I'll take that chance," said Nina, "for I know full well that when you have heard me, you will recognize that what I tell you must be the truth."

The golden head bowed slightly. "I am waiting," said Doris.

"Very well, then," said Nina, "and again I remind you that what I am going to say is said upon the assurance of your solemn word of honor never to repeat it. If you will say to me, right here and now, that you have no intention whatever of marrying Jim Stanley, why I'll say good-night and good-by, without further ado."

"So—that's it," said Doris quietly.

"Well," inquired Nina, "shall I go on, or shall I say good-night?"

"Go on," said Doris briefly.

"After what I have already told you," continued Nina, "the mention of his name almost completes my story. He has wrecked my life—that is the long and the short of it."

"In the—usual way?" murmured Doris.

"Oh, yes," cried Nina passionately. "I know, I know! It is the oldest story in the world, but I suppose it will be told and told and told again as long as the world stands and men are what they are."

"Of course I don't believe it," said Doris quietly.

"Because I know Jim Stanley."

"Then perhaps," said Nina, "perhaps you will tell me what you think my motive could possibly be in doing a thing like this? Do you think anything but a sense of desperation would have driven me to it?"

The shot went home, and Nina saw it.

"I can't believe it. I can't believe it," murmured Doris. "Jim Stanley, of all men in the world!"

"Oh, yes, I know," said Nina, "I know well enough how you must feel about him. I've been through it all. I hadn't had any too square a deal from life when I first met Jim Stanley, and when he came into my life I felt as you do, that here at last was a man I could tie to. Oh, he has a way with him."

"Why didn't he marry you?" said Doris.

"Of course he promised to," said Nina, "not once but a hundred times. If he hadn't I shouldn't be here. But osity was engaged. So after a moment's hesitation, she said: "Very well, I give you my word of honor."

"Very good," said Nina.

"Yes," continued Doris, while the smile still lingered in the corners of her mouth, "it shall be our little secret. And now what is it?"

how he only breathes at me. Oh, you'll say I've been a fool."

"I'm afraid," said Doris gently, "I wasn't thinking of you for the moment."

"Yes, and a fool I have been. I ought to have known that Jim Stanley could have only one use for a woman like me. But women like me gain knowledge only at the cost of hard experience. And I was in love—you can understand that, you who know Jim Stanley so well. You know how charming he can be, and I sometimes think that a woman in love is always a fool. Well, that's the story—part of it."

"What—more yet?" demanded Doris.

"More yet," said Nina. "I have a child to think of. Will you come and see him?"

"God forbid," replied the other. She grew suddenly cold. Little shivers ran up and down her spine. She wanted to go away and be alone. She hated the sight of this dark woman sitting there implacably before her. She hated the sound of her voice, and the glance of those Spanish black eyes.

Something of this feeling Nina must have sensed, for she went on quickly: "Try and think what it cost me to come and tell you this. Try and put yourself for a moment in my position. I needn't have come at all, I could have held my tongue. I could have done well for myself from one point of view. He has offered to buy me off. To buy my silence. I could have lived in comfort for the rest of my life. Jim's got plenty of money, and I had him where I wanted him. All this I've thrown away by coming here tonight. At least, I've risked it. And now if I haven't convinced you that I'm telling you the truth, I cannot see how it can be done."

Doris rose. She shivered a little as she said: "Perhaps I ought to thank you, but somehow I can't."

"Don't thank me," answered Nina, "believe me—that's all I want. And suddenly, silently, as ever, she was gone."

Doris rang the bell. "Light the fire, Barker," she said, "it's cold."

Directly across the Avenue a young man had been pacing nervously up and down for twenty minutes, with his eyes constantly upon the Colby house. As he saw the door swing upon its hinges and close upon the emerging figure, he hurried across the Avenue, limply dodging a bus and a flock of hurrying motors, and approaching Nina from the rear, seized her by the elbow.

"Well," he said, "well, what did you tell her?"

Nina looked at him with mocking eyes. "Find out for yourself," she said.

CHAPTER V

The Strollers club was an institution so old and exclusive that if you wished to become a member of it before you were too old to use it you had to be proposed about the time you were born. Waterman's father had, in fact, proposed him for membership three years before he came of age. It was the kind of a club that contains many ancient members who have favorite easy chairs which they regard as their personal property and which can be occupied by others only at the risk of their severe displeasure.

It may be imagined, therefore, that the Strollers was not Waterman's favorite club. He went there only when he wished to be alone. Tonight was one of those occasions. Thus far he had not been disturbed by any acquaintance, but at this moment an attendant arrived at his elbow with a slip from the telephone operator.

Waterman glanced at it and read: "Mr. Bromfield." He ground his teeth.

"Tell him I'm not in," he said, but as the attendant turned away he added: "No—no, I'll speak to him." And as he found his way to the telephone booth he muttered: "What the devil does he want now?" But he knew what Bromfield wanted—altogether too well.

Mr. Bromfield was a burly gentleman who operated games of chance in a side street just off the Avenue, next door to one of the famous restaurants of the world. He was a genial person—geniality was part of his stock in trade. He knew how to make it pay and he was presentable, in a way. Yet he never allowed his geniality to interfere materially with his bank account.

Consequently, though his conversation with Waterman on the telephone was most polite, Waterman had no doubt as to its meaning. Reduced to its essentials, it meant that if certain notes made by Waterman and now in the possession of the sporting man, were not taken up within a reasonable time, steps would be taken—steps not agreeable to contemplation. The reflections induced by this knowledge were not conducive to good digestion.

Nor, aside from this, was Waterman's mind entirely at ease. In the first place he really hadn't the slightest idea what Nina Morgan was going to say to Doris Colby. No knowing which way that cat would jump, he reflected.

And even if she jumped his way, he was by that very act placed unpleasantly in her hands. But he couldn't see any escape from it. Unless he married Doris Colby it appeared to him that his goose was cooked. If this marriage came off, it would at least give him time to turn around. The settlement of his most pressing obligations could be deferred upon the announcement of this brilliant engagement. Just how generous with her money the fair Doris would turn out to be with regard to a needy husband remained to be seen. But that was for the future.

Mrs. Ernest Siekman and her brother from Matteson have gone on an automobile trip to North Dakota.

Thus far eighteen new families have moved into the Elmore subdivision. They are of Swedish and of German nationality. These new people are a big asset to Tinley Park. George Lorenz is having the Saenger hall painted, Mr. Brust doing the work.

During the heavy thunderstorm Tuesday night the electric lights all over town were put out of service and the old candle lamp had to be pressed into service.

Garden Club Notes

BY

Mrs. John Swisher

I like a field that runs along
Beside an old rail fence;
The other side of which there grows
A tangled mass of grape and rose,
To make a hedge-row dense.

—E. B. Thomas

The Tinley Park Garden Club made a very interesting trip to Blue Island last week where they visited the gardens of Mrs. Neilson and Mr. and Mrs. Napier. Mrs. Neilson's garden was not yet in bloom, but one enjoyed the very interesting and unique plan of same. Mrs. Neilson invited the club back when the roses are in bloom.

This being the season for peonies, Mr. and Mrs. Napier's garden was a perfect riot of wonderful color.

This annual event calls together flower lovers both near and far. Saturday evening a few members of the club motored to Downers Grove to see Mr. and Mrs. C. J. Davis garden. Here was found a quaint and picturesque bit of landscaping, including what was termed by the visitors "A perfect Blue Spruce Tree". Mrs. Davis, who by the way is a sister to Mrs. J. Swisher, extends an invitation to all members of the garden club, to visit her garden at any time.

Many interesting discoveries were made by other members of the Garden Club last week, when they visited a few of the many lovely gardens right in our own village, and proved it not necessary to leave town in search of flower perfection. A peep into Mrs. Richard Ryan's pretty yard revealed an especially fine bed of gorgeous peonies in full bloom. Mrs. Ryan is the proud possessor of some rare varieties. Richard Ryan, Jr., has an attractive flower bed in shape of an airplane.

The next stop was at Mrs. Schaller's and I guess everyone knows about her beautiful old-fashioned garden. Up the street Mr. Henry Wyman was engaged in the planting of eighty pansy plants.

Mrs. Glogwartz whose garden is rapidly becoming famous in Tinley Park, has added an attraction this year, by making a bridge on the lot to the south of her home.

Mr. Clarence Goessel has a delightful garden at the far end of his yard where has a collection of 35 wild flowers; this spot is also a bird haven, and well worth walking over to see.

Mrs. Wm. Funk's garden is very bright and pretty now, as are the gardens of Mrs. W. Scheer, Mrs. P. Wannemacher and Mrs. Kehres. In fact there are just ever so many beautiful flower gardens right at our door-step in Tinley Park.

The owners of this spacious garden came well to the front and did their parts with grace and hospitality. Words fail to express the beauty of this bit of fairy-land.

The Garden Club will meet at the home of Mrs. E. Moss, Friday, June 21. Mrs. R. J. Hug, president of the club called an ex. meeting last Friday at the home of Mrs. J. E. Swisher to discuss plans for the coming flower show. Ice cream and cookies were served.

Mrs. E. Moss, Mrs. W. Combs, Sr., and Mrs. Wm. Funk attended the Flower Show at Homewood.
